Logo Brand Redesign

Brand Redesign ✓

A brand redesign involves a transformation of a company's brand identity. This can include changing the logo, color scheme, typography, and overall visual appearance. Companies decide to change their brand's look completely when they want to change how they are seen in the market, make it clearer what they stand for, or attract new customers.

The Client

Edmonton International Film Festival (EIFF), based in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, showcases a wide range of independent films from around the globe. Founded in 1986, it celebrates diverse cinematic experiences through screenings, workshops, and discussions, connecting filmmakers with audiences.

Problem

The Edmonton International Film Festival (EIFF) lacks clear branding guidelines and a cohesive brand identity. Its current logo is outdated and fails to convey a clear message about the festival's identity or purpose. Without consistent branding, EIFF struggles to establish a strong presence in the competitive world of film festivals,

Research Summary

The Edmonton International Film Festival Society (EIFFS) stands out as a beacon of diversity and inclusivity in the global cinema landscape, recognized by filmmakers, attendees, and sponsors alike for its prestigious platform that caters to both emerging and established talents. Its Oscar-qualifying status for short films amplifies its allure, positioning it uniquely among film festivals. However, amidst opportunities to broaden its global footprint and enhance its digital presence, EIFFS faces the challenge of adapting to the rapid evolution of film industry trends and maintaining its relevance amid stiff competition.

The festival’s mission to showcase diverse cinematic works aligns seamlessly with its brand identity, emphasizing quality, story, and originality. This reflects its core values of diversity and community engagement, setting a solid foundation for its branding goals. These include modernizing its visual identity to attract a wider audience, strengthening its online presence, and leveraging its unique selling points like the Oscar-qualifying status and eclectic programming. Despite its strengths, such as a robust community base and a wide film selection, EIFFS grapples with visibility issues and a perception of inaccessibility to younger demographics.

In a landscape where digital content and virtual events are increasingly demanded, the festival’s differentiation through a focus on diversity, community engagement, and its positioning as the year’s final Oscar-qualifying festival stand out. Yet, there is room to more effectively exploit these aspects in its branding to fill market gaps, particularly in expanding digital engagement to reach a global audience. Competitor analysis reveals the potential to adopt strategies focused on immersive experiences and technological leverage to enhance accessibility and appeal.

Central to the festival’s branding effort is the alignment with its diverse audience base, comprising film aficionados, industry insiders, and young filmmakers. By fine-tuning its branding to resonate more with digitally savvy, younger audiences, EIFFS can enhance its relevance. This involves embracing themes of diversity, storytelling, innovation, and community in both messaging and visual identity, alongside adopting a modern color scheme, accessible typography, and imagery that reflects the festival’s innovative spirit and commitment to celebrating the magic of cinema.

The overarching creative direction aimed at inclusivity, innovation, and the celebration of global cinema supports the festival’s objectives to widen its appeal and underscore its distinctive position in the film festival circuit. By integrating design elements that reflect Edmonton’s cultural landmarks with cinematic imagery from around the globe, EIFFS can reinforce its unique value proposition, thereby fostering greater engagement and participation and achieving its branding and operational goals.

Brand Audit

EIFF

The branding of the Edmonton International Film Festival (EIFF) lacks clarity and consistency. The logo feels outdated and doesn’t clearly represent the festival’s modern identity. Without clear branding guidelines, there’s a disjointed look across promotional materials. EIFF needs a refreshed brand strategy to better reflect its commitment to diverse filmmaking and resonate with both filmmakers and audiences.

TIFF

TIFF’s branding is sleek and modern, featuring bold typography and a distinctive red color scheme. With clear guidelines, it maintains consistency across all platforms, attracting top filmmakers and audiences worldwide. This strong brand presence poses a competitive challenge for EIFF, emphasizing the importance of a cohesive and visually appealing identity in the film festival landscape.

Strategy & Style

For EIFF, my strategy involves cultivating a modern and inclusive brand identity while expanding merchandise offerings. This includes updating the logo to convey contemporary relevance while retaining a nod to the festival’s heritage. Clear branding guidelines will ensure consistency across all platforms, fostering a cohesive image. By emphasizing the festival’s vibrant atmosphere and dynamic programming, we aim to attract filmmakers and audiences from diverse backgrounds. Additionally, expanding merchandise lines will not only generate revenue but also serve as a tangible way for attendees to connect with the festival experience beyond the screenings.

Potential Colors

The color black often represents film due to its association with darkness, theaters, and the cinematic experience itself. Additionally, shades of silver or metallic colors are also commonly associated with film, as they evoke the idea of film reels or the silver screen.

The shade of blue (C=100% M=92% Y=17% K=45) represents Edmonton’s logo by evoking a sense of stability and trustworthiness. Its calm and serene tone reflects the city’s tranquil atmosphere and commitment to reliability.

White is used to convey a sense of clarity or simplicity, allowing other colors or elements to stand out more prominently

Beige or light gray can communicate simplicity and minimalism, allowing for a clean and straightforward visual presentation.

Critique Feedback

Considering my chosen words—Sleek, Modern, Clean, Simplistic, and Minimalist—my peers suggested opting for a font that exudes a sense of modernity and sophistication, albeit with a touch of playfulness. Therefore, a font with a more rounded and contemporary appearance was recommended. Additionally, they advised against incorporating excessive visual symbolism in the logo variations to maintain a clean and straightforward design. Regarding color selection, black was deemed the most suitable choice due to its association with the cinematic realm, ensuring a timeless and impactful presence for the film festival logo

Rationale

The logo for the Edmonton International Film Festival represents a blend of modern minimalism and cinematic artistry. The choice of Kodchasen Bold as the font lends the design a clean, sleek, and straightforward quality that aligns with contemporary sensibilities. The boldness of the typeface ensures excellent readability and a strong visual impact, crucial for a film festival’s identity.

The most creative element is the substitution of the dot on the “i” with a camera lens, which is a clever nod to the filmmaking process. This detail acts as a symbolic representation of the film industry and the festival’s focus on the art of cinema. It captures attention and encourages viewers to make an immediate connection to the world of film.

The overall simplicity of the design aligns with the trend of modern logos that prioritize ease of recognition and potential for versatile use across various mediums. The black and white color scheme enhances the timeless aspect of the logo, ensuring it remains effective and adaptable for years to come.
